Texas Title Loans, a financial services provider helping the state?s residents get through tough financial situations by using their vehicles as leverageable assets, is shining a spotlight on a recent announcement by the state?s comptroller Glenn Hegar. On 14th July 2022, Glenn Hegar shared with Texas legislators and its residents that the state had added another $14 billion to an already robust surplus in its economy. Now, at the end of the two-year budget cycle that ends in August 2023, the state is projected to have a surplus of $40 billion. The state?s lawmakers are scheduled to make their decisions on how to utilize this surplus when they reconvene next year. The sizeable growth in the surplus was due to the state?s record sales tax numbers which were partly driven by the high oil and gas prices that have reached near-record levels due to inflation. The government attributes an excess of $300 million a month in sales tax due to the current economic conditions.

Texas Governor Dan Patrick has already outlined a plan for how the excess funds will be spent. According to his statement, he believes that any surplus should first go back to the taxpayers of Texas. Governor Patrick said that Texas will use an additional $4 billion for property tax relief next year, permanently increase the homestead exemption to $60,000 and ultimately $100,000, suspend the state gas tax for the remainder of 2022, and provide another 13th check for retired teachers.

"We feel it is extremely positive how Texas is thriving in this economic environment," said a spokesperson for Texas Title Loans. Though the state?s economy has completely recovered from the downturn triggered by the COVID pandemic, a lot of the state?s residents won?t be receiving the benefits of this windfall. For example, the property tax relief will only apply to homeowners or property owners. In Texas, 33.7% of the population lives in rented housing, according to statistics from Census.gov. Moreover, those who rent are more likely to be from low-income households that are unable to afford the down payment or monthly payments on a house of their own.

Thus, the Texas state government?s intention to pay back taxpayers is going to leave out many vulnerable individuals and families who are being squeezed just as bad due to the current rate of inflation nationwide, which reached 9.1% in June 2022. In fact, two-term Texas comptroller Glenn Hegar had said that the average Texas family was spending $3,500 more a year due to the hike in prices of essential goods and services.

Those who are still struggling to make ends meet in this economy, which has seen gas and grocery prices reach unmanageable levels, can turn to the Texas Title Loans for some immediate financial respite. Texas
