Dr. Aaron Tabor from Revival Soy is encouraging women suffering from menopausal hot flashes to try out the company?s range of soy shakes for menopause.

Revival Soy?s products are backed by exhaustive in-depth research that definitively shows the positive effect that isoflavones, phytonutrients that are found in soybeans in large concentrations, can have on menopausal discomforts. For example, a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled study of 60 Brazilian post-menopausal women between the ages of 40 and 60 found that there were substantial improvements in hot flashes in the group of women who were given soy shakes compared to the placebo group.

Revival Soy also points to another peer-reviewed and published study that was performed at The John Hopkins Hospital, a non-profit academic medical center in Baltimore, Maryland that is distinguished in the medical field for the quality of patient care, research, and education that it offers. The study, which was partly funded by Physicians Laboratories, found a reduction of nearly 40% in hot flashes and night sweats in menopausal women in just 12 weeks.

Dr. Aaron Tabor talks about why and how he created the first Revival Soy products by saying, ?Post menopause, my mother was experiencing the discomforts that usually follow that phase in a woman?s life. Observing her pain, my heart went out to her, and I set out on a journey to find a natural solution for her ailment. My extensive research showed that Asian women report lower rates of menopausal hot flashes. This is attributed to the high amount of soy protein in Asian diets. I also found compelling evidence that the different types of isoflavones found in soybeans, namely Daidzein, Genistein, and Glycitein, play a critical role in the health benefits that soy offers. So, armed with this knowledge, I devised a process to extract the phytonutrients from soybeans and concentrate them in a palatable form that was not just extremely healthy but also tasty to drink. The first few experiments were disappointing as it was hard to isolate the soy proteins from the gritty texture and chalky taste that is unique to soybeans. Finally, after two years of tweaking the process, I perfected it. Today, the naturally concentrated Revival Soy blend carries the same amount of isoflavones as are found in 6 cups of typical soy milk. Apart from offering health benefits to menopausal women, we also have a range of soy shakes for weight loss that are popular with those trying to get in shape. We urge you to head over to our website today to browse through our entire product range.?

Women of all ages and demographics across the country are using Revival Soy products to fight menopausal discomforts as well as get the nutrition they need without putting on excess weight. The love that Revival Soy customers feel for its products is plain to see in the hundreds of grateful testimonials that it has received over the years.

One review by Brenda G., which talks about the products? benefits for women going through menopause, says, ?Revival is by far the best tasting soy product I have tried. I started using your product as I have started pre-menopause and want to head off menopause problems, to stay feeling better and healthier.?

A similar review by Linda W. says, ?Revival Soy has made me feel years younger! I started with hot flashes last November and many mood swings. After using Revival Soy for 3 weeks, they have totally gone away. I am not exaggerating; I have not had a single hot flash. I used to go outside in the dead of winter without a coat just to cool down! My family was suffering because the house was too cold for them. I have shared your info with all whom I encounter who have similar problems. Thanks so much.?

A review by Patricia M., who uses them for weight loss, says, ?I am drinking the shakes to help diet and lose weight. It is helping. I like the shakes because they make you feel full.?
