And third, they offer reasonable and predictive pricing, including reduced prices for property management clients.

Marc Sims, owner of North Texas Plumbing, says, ?As a property manager maintaining your relationships with both tenants and property owners is important to you and we are here to make solving tenant plumbing issues easy for you. We work for you and follow your direction. All work we perform must be approved by the property manager. We will not take direction from tenants without express approval by the property manager.?

A property manager is a company or individual who is responsible for operating a real estate property for a fee when the owner is unable to do the tasks personally or is not interested in performing them. The real estate property may be individual title owned or share block company owned, owned under the sectional title, and may be registered for residential, commercial office, and industrial or retail use. The relationship the property manager has with the landlord and the tenant is key in forming the expectations of both parties to the lease since both parties will be expecting certain benefits and rights.

Meanwhile, they can also provide plumbing services for property managers of multifamily residential housing, where there are several housing units for residents that are contained in one building or a number of building within one complex. They also offer commercial plumbing services for landlords. A landlord is the owner of a residential home, condominium, apartment, land, or real estate property, which is leased or rented to an individual or a company. Many landlords also get the services of a property manager or they can do the property management tasks themselves. North Texas Plumbing also offers plumbing services for apartments, which is a self-contained housing unit that is part of a building.
