To make its case for the significant economic progress expected in Grand Prairie over the next few years, the company is quoting the city's profile as published on BestPlaces.net, an online resource that provides various statistics such as cost of living, schools, crime rates, climate, house prices, and more, for thousands of towns and cities across the United States.

BestPlaces.net begins its analysis of the Grand Prairie economy by saying that the city has an unemployment rate of 7.4% which is higher than the national average of 6.0%. However, it also acknowledges that the city, which had a population of just over 200,000 in 2021, has also seen its job market increase by 3.1% within the last year. Moreover, the future job growth over the next 10 years is predicted to be 43.6% which is higher than the US average of 33.5% for the same time. The city also had a lower drop in the total number of jobs over the last year (3.7%) compared to the US average (6.2%).

Though the average income of a single Grand Prairie resident ($23,101) is lower than the US average ($28,555), the median household income in Grand Prairie ($55,336) is higher than the US median household income ($53,482) which suggests a strong emphasis of the city's residents on either cohabitation or the family unit. In 2021, the city issued 507 new single-family building permits and oversaw the development of over 1.34 million square feet of new commercial and industrial property.

A representative for Texas Title Loans responded to the economic forecasts by saying, "We love to see the economy growing in Grand Prairie, Texas." The healthy economic projections can also be attributed to the initiatives sponsored by Grand Prairie's administrative bodies that are making the right moves to attract investment to the city. For example, the city's government has established the Grand Prairie Economic Development department, a team of professionals who use their expertise to develop, advise, manage, and invest, to strengthen the city's commercial business community and help grow its economy.

The Economic Development department's portal is optimized for investors and business owners. It makes available resources that entrepreneurs can use to apply for permits as well as find out all the information that they need to start a business in the city. Business owners can also search for featured properties that are available for leasing or purchase, get information on all available incentives for qualified projects looking to relocate to Grand Prairie, apply for an economic development incentive, get in touch with someone from the Economic Development department, learn about the tax rates of the taxing jurisdictions in the city, and apply for the Tarrant County Small Business Workforce Recovery Grant Program.
