Ed Gelb, founder and CEO of Vanguard Online Marketing, says a company's website is its voice. He remarked, "It is the basis for what the audience will evaluate. It reflects the whole of a company, and people will form an opinion based on it. Thus, it must attract attention in one look. It must be professional in all aspects."

While it may look easy, website development involves a lot of work, not to mention skills and knowledge, to create websites that both look good and function well. This is where Vanguard Online Marketing comes in. The full-service digital marketing company has a well-established web design team knowledgeable about the most recent, highly effective website designs.

"We are a creative team experienced in designing and getting any website optimized. We are focused on results-driven website design services to ensure our client's website is growth-orientated, driving increased visitors and conversions," says VOM.

The web design and development company also greatly values customer satisfaction and relationships. They listen to their clients and work with them to realize their business goals. "The website design is not complete until the customer is delighted. Using several website designs, we tailor your website design to your specifications, giving it the style and feel required to attract customers," the company states.

Furthermore, Vanguard Online Marketing provides website maintenance services. They ensure the functionality and regular updates of the client's website. As part of their maintenance services, they back up websites, update software, remove spam, examine the whole site for mistakes and broken links, and guarantee the site's speed and operation.
