If you find yourself in an auto accident in Atlanta, the firm says, your immediate response should be to get yourself examined by a medical professional. Over the years, we have worked with many clients who had previously neglected or delayed treatment, and this course has never worked out in their favor. On one hand, the average person cannot accurately estimate the extent of their injuries, and even victims who are themselves medically trained understand that they should get checked out by another party. In the immediate aftermath of an accident, they may have injuries that are difficult to identify right away, such as whiplash, so getting treatment as quickly as possible can mitigate the effect it has on their body, finances and quality of life down the line.

Receiving medical care also has the advantage of ensuring that the patient's injuries are cataloged by a professional whose evaluation can be admissible as evidence in court. While a victim's testimony will carry some weight, it is recommended that they have a doctor or other recognized party who can corroborate their account. This will make it much easier for them to get the compensation or settlement they deserve.

Once the victim's immediate medical needs have been tended to, their next step should be to consult with an Atlanta accident attorney who specializes in such personal injury cases. While the firm acknowledges that any attorney can provide assistance in this regard, a case has the highest chance of a satisfactory conclusion when handled by an experienced individual or team, such as those found at Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C.

As the firm states, "When you or anyone within your family is involved in a car accident, you may have to contend with a large number of medical bills, physical pain, discomfort, lost income and emotional distress. It is crucial for you to understand that you have options if you experience such an incident. Most people will not know what to do in this situation, besides seeking medical attention. It is our strong recommendation that you make every effort to consult a qualified automobile accident lawyer in Atlanta."

Another reason for this is the fact that most people will consider it easier to trust their insurance provider to take care of all the related costs and bills. This may include property damage as well as medical bills and so on, but the firm warns that this is only true in ideal scenarios. In most cases, an insurer has an incentive to refuse coverage since this would cut into their profits, so it is deeply unlikely that they will put their client's interests first – even when they are demonstrably in dire need of financial assistance. The firm has seen many insurers outright deny coverage or take every opportunity to reduce the amount they pay out, which has a direct, negative impact on the victim's ability to pay their bills and begin reconstructing their life once more. The more serious their injuries, the harder it can be for them to fight an insurer that attempts to do this, so their best option is to seek out Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C.

One aspect that sets Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. apart from other firms is the fact that they are willing to go to the client when required. The firm has nine locations across Georgia (including Atlanta), and their team can be at a client's side within a short period if requested, such as when the client is unable to leave their home or hospital bed due to strenuous injury. For this and any other inquiries regarding auto accident cases, the firm can be reached via phone or email. Clients may also use the contact portal on the firm's website to get in touch.
