Moving a piano is typically a task that cannot be a DIY project. It is often a job where professional movers should be asked to perform the task. This is especially true for those who need to move the piano down a flight of stairs, into an elevator, or the piano has to be moved through tight spaces. It is important to remember that pianos are not just heavy, they are also awkward. For instance, upright pianos have a concentration of their weight in the top half and their feet and legs can be fragile. Professional movers also have the proper tools and equipment for moving the piano safely and efficiently.

Another factor that makes piano moving difficult is the keyboard. An important step is to protect the keyboard and this may be done by closing and locking the keyboard lid. This is vital because the keys are fragile and can easily be damaged. And when lifting the piano, it is important to remember not to lift it by its legs because these are fragile and can get damaged. And it is also vital to ensure that the piano is always in an upright position while being moved because laying it on its side can affect its inner mechanics.

Founded in 2005, 5 Stars Movers has been meeting and exceeding the expectations of customers. They fully understand the emotional and physical aspects of moving. They can handle everything in the process of moving, from residential moves, commercial moves, local and long distance moves, and storage.
