

Las Vegas Air Conditioning Company Wants To Save Community Through Heating Or AC Repair

November 17, 2015

November 17, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Las Vegas Air Conditioning Inc., a business in Las Vegas, NV, has announced that they want to save Vegas through heating or AC repairs. They will offer free repair on HVAC systems to those who are able to touch their hearts. The company has launched the "Saving Vegas" program in an effort to help senior citizens and others who are most in need and who are unable to afford expensive repairs. Full details are available through <http://lasvegasair.net/>.

Stephen Gamst from Las Vegas Air Conditioning says, "If you're sitting in your home wondering how to get warm or how to get cool, because you can't afford the needed repairs, we are willing to fix your system for nothing. We'll be satisfied with the good feeling we get in being able to help. Just come on down to the Las Vegas Air Conditioning office located at 6220 Kimberly Ave. Unit 13, Las Vegas, NV 89122 and fill out an application."

Through the application, the company aims to identify those who are most in need, which is why it can also be completed online for those who are less mobile. Each month, the company will complete a number of repairs for free. Qualifying participants must have a broken HVAC system, are unable to receive help from their family, and must share their story.

The family of Erin and Johnny Hicks with five children were the previous winners of the free repair. "We are both out of work as my husband Johnny was fired from his government job," says Erin Hicks. "He had two surgeries, leaving him unable to work and I am disabled myself. I make a little bit of money through crocheting, the money of which I use to feed the kids. We all share a room so we could share a small portable AC as well. It was awful. We are all so happy to have been considered for the Saving Vegas program."

The Hicks story touched the company's heart and they now have a fully functioning system. People are encouraged to visit Las Vegas Air Conditioning Inc.'s Facebook business page for further details about the Saving Vegas program and how they can get involved.
