Dentists have long been looking for new and innovative ways to market their services in order to attract new patients. In the past, this has generally meant traditional methods such as print advertising, word-of-mouth marketing, and referrals from other dentists. However, in the last decade or so a new form of marketing has emerged that is proving to be very effective for dentists - internet marketing.

More people than ever are looking for a dentist online. The majority of these people only look at the top 3 search results. That's where SEO comes in. It can help a website rank higher in search engine results pages, which means more people will visit the website and might become patients. In fact, dentists who use SEO techniques see an average increase of 20% in web traffic. SEO can also help target new markets and grow a dental practice beyond its current locality. Almost half of all dental patients do online research before making an appointment with a dentist.

97% of all businesses use the internet to market their products and services. According to a study by the American Dental Association, about half of all dentists are looking to grow their practice in the next five years.
