Miami personal injury lawyer David H. Charlip releases a new article (https://charliplawgroup.com/can-i-file-a-personal-injury-claim-without-a-lawyer/) explaining the possibility of filing a personal injury claim without the help of a lawyer. The injury lawyer mentions that some people are often keen on saving money especially if they have been injured in an accident. People often let go of the idea of having a lawyer to represent them in a personal injury claim to save up on attorney fees. However, this decision may end up costing more in the end.

?In Florida, you can represent yourself under the law or in court for a personal injury case. This is called appearing pro se or on your own behalf. However, there are some situations that could prevent you from representing yourself before the court. These situations include suing a corporation, suing on behalf of your child, and filing a lawsuit against a group,? says the Miami personal injury lawyer.

The lawyer explains that if a person chooses to be their own personal representative in a personal injury claim, it means that they must prepare everything on their own. The person will have to submit their own case to the appropriate clerk and pay the filing fee on their own. Aside from that, the victim will also have to act as the plaintiff and collect evidence such as police reports and medical records, and any other documentation needed to support their case.

Attorney David H. Charlip says that there will be a chance that the defendant will be represented by a lawyer. Going against someone who is well-versed in the law can be disadvantageous for the plaintiff. The defendant?s lawyer may request that the plaintiff submit documents that were retrieved through the rules of legal discovery.

In the article, attorney Charlip adds, ?Without an attorney, there is a possibility that you may want to rush things and resolve them as quickly as possible. However, by doing this, you also open the gate for more complications to come in. And since you do not have the skilled legal help of a personal injury lawyer, you will have to face these issues on your own.?

Lastly, the personal injury attorney emphasizes the importance of having a skilled lawyer when it comes to matters such as seeking personal injury compensation. An experienced personal injury lawyer may be able to help the victim receive the compensation they deserve.
