Plantar warts are caused by HPV (the Human Papillomavirus). Though HPV is commonly regarded as a sexually transmitted infection, it is, in fact, a family of viruses that encompasses over 200 different types. Non-sexually acquired HPV spreads through direct contact with broken or macerated skin. This ease of transmission makes HPV responsible for a wide range of skin conditions including plantar warts.

Plantar warts are stubborn scaly growths that are found on the balls and the heels of the feet. Plantar warts tend to dig deep into the infected person's skin making them very hard to remove. Consequently, several treatments have been used over the years to address plantar warts including cryotherapy, application of Salicylic acid, laser ablation, and more. Some podiatrists may even recommend minor surgery if regular treatments have proven ineffective for a patient.

However, all of the aforementioned treatments are known to be uncomfortable and even painful to some extent. Most importantly, the treatments are known to be imprecise because the underlying methods of removing plantar warts cannot discriminate between healthy tissue and infected tissue. This leads to unintended damage to the surrounding tissues. The patient also needs significant time to recover from the treatments.

Saorsa's Swift Microwave Plantar Wart Therapy System has changed all of that. The system uses the power of safe and controllable microwaves to only target the skin cells affected by the virus. The non-ionizing radiation from the microwaves travels no deeper than 6.5mm in the skin in a straight line with no lateral spread. The Swift system also does not produce any smoke, plume, or smell, making it an overall cleaner and safer alternative.

Marian Davis DPM talks about incorporating the SWIFT Microwave Therapy System in her clinic's suite of podiatry treatments by saying, "I have always prioritized the safety and comfort of my patients at my Miami clinic. This compels me to study the latest advancements in the science of foot care and incorporate them into the clinic's diagnostic and treatment workflow. I strongly believe that the Saorsa Swift Microwave Therapy system is the future when it comes to treating plantar warts. It has shown proven results, offers cleaner and safer treatments, and drastically reduces the time needed to recuperate.
