

Cortes Law Firm Discusses the Value of a HIPAA Authorization

OKLAHOMA CITY, OK - September 29, 2022 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Cortes Law Firm, which is based in Oklahoma City, OK, has released a blog post that explains the importance of a Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) Authorization. This is a document that provides someone, typically one's trustee and health care power of attorney, the power to have access to one's medical records for the purpose of discussing one's health with the medical providers. This is important because of the restriction imposed by the HIPAA Privacy Rule. The HIPAA Authorization has to be written in plain language, has to be in writing, and must contain certain statements and elements for it to be valid. It should also be used with a Living Will.

Important elements that have to be included in the HIPAA Authorization are: a description of the protected health information (PHI); the name of the person making the authorization; the name of the person or organization who is authorized to receive the PHI; a description of the use or purpose of the disclosure; an expiration date for the authorization; and the signature of the person making the authorization.

Meanwhile, it should also contain the following statements: the person who gave the authorization has the right to revoke the authorization in writing at any time and a description of how they may revoke is also provided; the person's payment, treatment, enrollment, or eligibility for benefits is not based on whether they signed the authorization or not; and any information revealed because of the authorization may be re-disclosed by a recipient and will no longer be subject to federal or state health privacy laws.

And it is important to understand the difference between right of access and authorization. The most notable difference is that "right of access" is a patient's right to gain access to their own medical records while "authorization" refers to the patient's consent to disclose PHI to a third party. However, it is possible for patients to use their right of access to request that their records be sent to a third party, for instance, a health care records app.

And it should be pointed out that patients giving reviews or testimonials on the website or Facebook page of a healthcare provider can't be regarded as automatic HIPAA Authorization for their name or any other information about them to be used. Even just the name of the patient, connected to the healthcare provider is considered as PHI under HIPAA, and should never be disclosed on the Facebook page or website without a valid authorization. The solution for healthcare providers is to get an authorization for testimonials, the use of social media or photos, in advance.
