Web standards dictate how websites are able to maintain their online presence. Google standards now require websites to not only be optimized for search engines, but to also become tailored for mobile users and social media. Businesses who cannot keep up with these policies are in the losing end of a highly competitive online market where new websites emerge every single day that can easily topple those that have pre-existed. As more and more people turn to their mobile devices, tablets and ipads, it is important now more than ever for websites to cater to these platforms.

All businesses have a target customer in mind but with the multitude of competing websites eager for the same traffic, it is difficult to get your brand positioned on top, right where your preferred customers can find it.
