New York City ceiling collapse lawyer Samantha Kucher (https://www.rrklawgroup.com/what-causes-a-ceiling-to-collapse/) releases a new article explaining the reasons for ceiling collapses in New York. The lawyer mentions that there are many buildings in New York that are older. This is why it may be possible for someone to live in a building that is at risk of leaks, a roofing problem, and even a ceiling collapse.

?Sturdy ceilings in Brooklyn and other New York City buildings are built to last. However, it is possible there may be defects in the foundation or roofing, which can result in a ceiling not being as strong as envisioned. This could happen when a building is very old or when a defect is overlooked by the construction team,? says the New York City ceiling collapse lawyer.

The lawyer explains that a ceiling collapse usually happens due to a couple of reasons. These reasons include improper maintenance, weather damage, wall failure, pressure from the attic, pipe leaks, improper construction, violations of building code, damage from termites, and items stored on drywall instead of joists in the attic.

Attorney Samantha Kucher also adds that property owners are required to ensure that their buildings are up to safety standards. If a ceiling collapses and results in serious injuries, the property owner or the landlord may be held liable. The liability for the accident usually depends on the circumstances surrounding the ceiling collapse.

In the article, attorney Samantha Kucher says that if a ceiling collapses, it creates a dangerous situation for the tenants. The building is exposed to the elements of nature and has no cover. After a ceiling collapses, debris can also fall inward and cause head, neck, or back injuries.

According to the injury lawyer, ?You must prove negligence on the part of a property owner if you?ve experienced a collapsed ceiling and suffered injuries. Premises liability makes the landlord or property owner responsible if you can prove negligence. Property owners have a duty of care to ensure that their buildings are properly maintained in a reasonably safe manner so that residents, tenants, and visitors can remain safe.?

Lastly, attorney Kucher emphasizes the importance of seeking the help of an experienced personal injury lawyer. Having a skilled lawyer may be able to help the victim receive the compensation they deserve for their injuries.
