Austin, Texas - November 30, 2022 -
Austin Tenant Advisors, a commercial space rental company based in Austin, TX, wants to inform doctors and other health care professionals that they are offering help to medical practices search for medical office space in Austin. They want to emphasize that getting the help of a commercial real estate broker in leasing medical office space can offer several benefits, such as: reduction of time spent looking for office space and negotiating the lease; reduction in costs; better contracts; and reduction of one?s stress levels. More about this can be gleaned from https://www.austintenantadvisors.com/medical-office/.

Nathan Smith, owner of Austin Tenant Advisors, says, ?We can help you find Austin medical office space for lease / rent or sale. We are local experts who know the medical office and dental office space market well and will represent your best interests to find you the most appropriate space and ensure you get the lowest lease or purchase rates and best terms possible. The difference between general office and medical office space in Austin might be minimal, but it is no less critical. Health-care professionals demand special space that meets unique needs. We can help you navigate the Austin medical office market by utilizing our local market expertise to find the best space. From analyzing an existing lease to handling lease negotiation on a new space, our insight and market contacts pave the way for a smooth transaction.?

They want to point out that there are a number of considerations when finding and renting medical office space. First of all, while it is not always an option, such as in larger office buildings, many health care professionals may be able to request for exclusivity during negotiations. As part of the lease agreement, the landlord will agree not to lease any nearby space to a health care practice offering the same services during the term of the lease.

Second, it is important to request for additional build-out allowance. This is because build-out costs for medical offices are usually larger compared to those for general office use. Since the improvements that will be made for the medical office will be there even after the lease has ended, it is possible to argue for a bigger tenant build-out allowance. Third, other concerns must be addressed in the lease agreement, such as options, maintenance fees lease length, who is responsible for repair, and more.

Fourth, it is essential to make sure that the office space is suitable for the medical practice?s needs. For instance, the health care professional may find out later that the waiting room is too small for the number of patients. It is important to ensure that the layout of the medical office is functional for both patients and the practice.

Fifth, it is vital to examine one?s location needs carefully. There are various aspects to consider, such as proximity to where the patients reside, hospitals, other doctors, and access to the highway. Other important concerns are building visibility, relationships with nearby practices, parking, and more.
