October 12, 2022 -

Brooklyn construction accident attorney Samantha Kucher (https://www.rrklawgroup.com/construction-accidents-lawyer/) discusses construction accidents in her newly released article. The lawyer mentions in the article that construction accidents can be dangerous because they can result in serious injuries and even death. Construction accidents can also happen to anyone around the area - employees, supervisors, and even passersby.

Brooklyn construction accident lawyer Samantha Kucher also discusses the common types of construction accidents. This includes crane accidents, structural collapse, ladder accidents, scaffolding accidents, electrical accidents, unsafe/dangerous equipment accidents, construction site falls, welding accidents, fires and explosions, and many more.

According to the personal injury lawyer, ?Recently the Occupational Health and Safety Administration

(OSHA) conducted a study that discovered safety violations in approximately 66% of construction job sites in New York. The Complicated Situation Facing Injured Construction Workers If you were injured in a construction site accident in New York City, the situation you face could be more than a little complicated.?

In the article, the lawyer also explains that in some cases, the negligent party is the general contractor. In other cases, it could be the owner of the property. However, there are also times when both the contractor and the owner have a liability in an accident that occurred at the construction site.

The personal injury lawyer says, ?If you were injured in a construction site accident in New York City, the situation you face could be more than a little complicated. In many cases, the accident might have occurred through no fault of your own.?

Attorney Samantha Kucher discusses in the new article that construction accidents are rarely minor and even if the injury is minor, it still should be taken seriously. An injury can cause someone to be out of a job for weeks or even months. In some severe cases, a construction accident can also end up in death.

Lastly, construction accident lawyer Samantha Kucher explains that having a skilled lawyer is very important in cases like construction accidents. An experienced lawyer may be able to help the victim receive the compensation they deserve.
