October 27, 2022 -
Acacia Dental Group, a dental practice in Phillip, ACT, Australia, is pleased to announce that they are prepared to take advantage of the forecasted growth of the cosmetic dentistry industry at a CAGR of 2.2 percent for the period of 2020 to 2025. The worldwide global cosmetic dentistry market is predicted to reach US$18 billion in 2025, compared to just US$16.5 billion in 2019.

Cosmetic dentistry is a vital component of the oral health industry that is focused on making people feel more confident and comfortable with their smiles. The cosmetic dentist will first assess the patient?s basic smile and facial characteristics, such as how the lips frame the smile. Then the dentist will focus on fixing any issues, such gaps, spaces, and overlapping teeth. And finally, the cosmetic dentist will check for any stains, discoloration, and any unattractive fillings and provide the necessary solutions.

Cosmetic dentistry is an emerging field of dentistry because of a number of factors that have combined to fuel the significant growth of the industry. First, developing countries currently have more disposable income, which means they can now choose to set aside a part of their income to significantly improve their smiles. Second, the baby boomer generation are currently faced with age-related oral and tooth issues and therefore have a significant need for cosmetic dentistry. And finally, the developments in social media and technology have significantly increased the need for people to care about their appearance, which has led them to find solutions in cosmetic dentistry to improve their smiles and become more attractive.

The Canberra cosmetic dentist is ready to provide various kinds of cosmetic dentistry procedures. These include: white dental fillings; inlays and onlays; CEREC dental crowns; teeth whitening; dental veneers; and crowns and bridges. Sirisha Yalamanchili, who is part of the husband and wife team running the Acacia Dental Group, says, ?Cosmetic dentistry focuses on improving the aesthetics of your teeth, including the colour, position, shape, size and alignment. And, all of that goes towards giving you the best possible smile. What?s more, while not every type of cosmetic dentistry improves the functionality of your teeth, many of them do. Cosmetic dentistry is pretty advanced nowadays, with more durable and natural-looking treatments than ever before. So, if you want to smile with confidence, take a look at some of the cosmetic dentistry procedures available to you at Acacia Dental Group, located in Woden.?

Advances in technology include CEREC technology, which has revolutionised the process for tooth restorations. First, a three-dimensional digital scan of the tooth or teeth is taken with the CEREC machine. This is important because it allows the patient to view the images on the screen and fully understand how the treatment will be done. The CEREC machine will then create the dental crown or whatever is needed to restore the missing tooth or teeth. All that the dentist will need to do is polish the product made by the CEREC machine and then fit the restoration to allow the patient to have a better smile. The restoration is also much faster as it can be available within the same day instead of waiting for weeks.

Started in 1989, Acacia Dental Group is a privately-owned dental practice that has been providing family dentistry services to Woden and surrounding areas, including Canberra, for more than 32 years.
