New York City contested divorce lawyer Ryan Besinque (<https://www.besinquelaw.com/contested-divorce-attorneys-new-york/>) releases a new article that discusses the grounds for a divorce in the New York supreme court. According to the lawyer, divorce can be difficult and stressful for all involved. Divorce is generally peaceful and straightforward. There are many things that can cause tension and stress among spouses.

According to the New York City contested divorce lawyer."It stands to reason that a couple's communication has probably broken down significantly by the time they decide to divorce. At this point, there may be significant disharmony and an inability to come to common ground, particularly when it comes to things such as division of property, custody, and child support.?"

The lawyer mentions that the only difference between a New York contested and uncontested divorcement is the final decision-making. An uncontested divorce is a divorce where the terms of the divorce are not subject to court approval because the couple can agree to the terms. Uncontested divorces tend to be simple and inexpensive.

Attorney Ryan Besinque explains that the terms of a contested divorce are decided by the judge. These include the division of marital assets and custody of the children.

In the article, attorney Ryan Besinque lists the grounds for divorce at the New York Supreme Court. These grounds include adultery, cruelty, and abandonment.

"No-fault divorces have been available in New York since 2010. This is when a couple can use the grounds that the marriage has been irretrievably broken. The couple must still agree to matters of property division, custody and support of children, and spousal support, which can be either settled mutually outside of court or court-ordered," says the NYC contested divorce lawyer.

Lastly, attorney Ryan Besinque emphasizes the importance of having a skilled divorce lawyer when it comes to matters like property division and child support. Having an attorney may be able to help the client understand their rights and guide them in making the right decision.
