Michigan domestic violence lawyer Paul J. Tafelski (https://www.michigandefenselaw.com/blog/accused-domestic-violence/) releases a new article explaining what an individual should do when they are accused of domestic violence in Michigan. The lawyer mentions that domestic violence is taken very seriously in the state of Michigan. However, being falsely accused of domestic violence can be very daunting.

According to the Michigan domestic violence lawyer, ?Unfortunately, false accusations of domestic abuse are more common than you think. They are particularly prevalent in divorce or custody cases when one party is trying to gain an advantage in court. Even when you know you are innocent, anger, frustration, and despair may take the place of logic.?

The lawyer explains that talking to a domestic violence defense attorney is the first step a person should take after they are accused of domestic violence. A person accused of domestic violence must avoid their accuser as much as possible, too. Separation may help both parties have a chance to cool down.

Attorney Paul Tafelski adds that after an arrest, the defendant should know that they have the right to remain silent. Even if they may be tempted to proclaim their innocence, it is important to not make any statements until they are able to speak with an attorney.

In the article, attorney Tafelski also lists tips about what a defendant should do with the allegations. The lawyer says that it is important to address underlying issues. Since it?s not uncommon for domestic violence allegations to come from factors affecting a person?s life, it is important that they try to address those issues in order to improve their life.

According to the defense attorney, ?You should not talk about the domestic violence charges with anyone but your attorney. This prohibition included discussing the underlying incident, the circumstances of your arrest, the status of a PPO, and any other aspect of the case. Other people may become witnesses based upon these conversations, so keep the details to yourself.?

Lastly, attorney Paul Tafelski encourages those who are charged with a criminal offense to seek the help of an experienced criminal defense attorney. Having a skilled lawyer may be able to help the defendant protect their freedom and understand their rights in the case.
