

Meet Positives Goes Well Beyond Just Being an Impactful Herpes Dating Website

November 02, 2022

Chicago, Illinois - November 02, 2022 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

For over 20 years Meet Positives has been helping those with herpes have a better chance at finding a partner. The unique way that this dating website for people with herpes goes about making matches has made it the #1 dating website for people with that form of STD.

While that is impressive by itself, Meet Positives also has strived to be as well-rounded a service as possible and takes steps to help positive singles with more than just dating. Evidence of that is over the years this dating website has morphed into more of a social platform as opposed to being just a purpose-specific dating site. This has resulted in more positive singles with herpes using this website than ever before.

A representative of Meet Positives, Michael Task, stated, "We here at meetpositives.com have always claimed to be as progressive a dating service within our specific niche as possible. That's why over the years we have come up with creative ways to use our unique social platform. That includes adding features that allow our users to set up support groups, create social events, and for us to give out dates for our various learning workshops." He says that all one must do to see how effective meetpositives.com has become as a social media platform is to refer to the company's Facebook Page. Once there, site users will see that many of the posts on the home page have information on herpes singles getting together in various cities such as Louisville, Boise, and Milwaukee. Task said those at their service will continue to find useful ways to use their website as a social and informational platform for those with herpes.

Task further described how they like to be known as a social platform as opposed to just a dating website. He says, "MeetPositives.com has always been both an online dating website and social platform. It was created to connect people who are infected with herpes or another type of STD with other like infected individuals. These individuals can be single or attached because the emphasis with us is on building an interactive community not just a herpes matchmaking site. Because of this, our site members have shown a keen interest to explore dating, attend social gatherings, or join support groups through our service. The way our website is designed also gives site users the ability to interact with each other through emails and by using our text & video messaging services."

The company representative also acknowledged that more people are reaping the benefits of their herpes dating website than ever before now that it is also available in a convenient app. Both Apple and Android versions of the app can be downloaded through such app finders as Google Play. He noted that both versions can also be downloaded free of charge. Task believes that those that sign up for their service will love how easy the app is to use and how it also will make them comfortable knowing they are a very discreet herpes dating service. All a member must do to start using the new app successfully is to input some simple information into it. This includes such things as age, gender, location, and dating preference.

Members will also be able to input what they are looking for through the app and the desired distance of their search range. He mentioned this setting can be as small as the local area or include users from a big list of countries such as Thailand, Belgium, Morocco, and Uruguay. This app is also providing some inner peace to those that search for a date through it because they are searching for others with shared herpes and STD experiences and the anxiety that can go along with a positive single entering back into the dating scene. Task stated that this is because no positive individual who uses their herpes dating service will ever have to come clean to their new partner (known as "the talk") about their affliction.

The company representative invited those that would like more information on the Meet Positives herpes dating service to refer to the company's Facebook Page or visit their website.
