Manhattan divorce lawyer Richard Shum (https://www.romanshum.com/) releases a new article explaining the different types of divorce in New York. The lawyer mentions that going through a divorce can be overwhelming. Especially when a divorce is contentious, it is crucial for a couple to seek the help of an experienced divorce attorney.

?An uncontested divorce happens when the couple agrees to end their marriage without any arguments about the main issues surrounding their divorce. In comparison, a contested divorce happens when there are disputes over key divorce issues. This type of divorce usually goes to court and a judge makes the decisions for the couple,? the Manhattan divorce lawyer says.

The lawyer mentions that getting an uncontested divorce usually has many benefits. When minor children are involved, an uncontested divorce can help lessen the emotional struggle between the couple. However, an uncontested divorce can also become contested if the parties fail to agree on any terms of the divorce.

Attorney Richard Shum explains that contested divorce can take up more time. It can also raise tension between parties because the parties will have to go to court and make decisions for the couple. A contested divorce requires the legal advice of a skilled divorce lawyer who may help the couple understand their roles and responsibilities in the divorce.

In the article, attorney Shum adds, ?Going through a divorce is never easy. It can be a highly emotional time and can bring a lot of stress to everyone involved. Having a skilled lawyer to help you navigate this process can be helpful in ensuring that you are getting the most favorable income possible. An experienced lawyer may also be able to help you ensure your children's well-being is protected.?

Lastly, the divorce lawyer emphasizes that having a divorce lawyer can help the couple ensure they have all the legal support they need. A skilled divorce attorney can help the couple draft their agreements and make sure that the agreement is legally enforceable.
