Miller's Home Improvement, a company offering roofing services in Clinton Township, MI, has recently released a blog post about wavy or rippled roofs and whether these should be a concern or not. Wavy or rippled roofs are quite common but these might be an indication of defects in certain instances. One possible cause of wavy or rippled roofs is that the roofers that recently installed or replaced the roof made some errors in the spacing of the materials when they provided allowances for the roofing materials expanding or contracting. As the roofing materials contract during winter or expand during summer, a wavy or rippled appearance may emerge. Another possibility is poor attic ventilation, which causes more heat to be absorbed by the asphalt shingles, making them look wavy or rippled.

Eric Miller, the owner of Miller's Home Improvement, says, ?A wavy or rippled roof can ruin the curb appeal of one?s home. Furthermore, this may indicate that some damage is occurring to the roofing materials. Thus, it is advisable to contact a professional roofing contractor like us in order to have the roof inspected and we can make the proper recommendation on what to do about it. Rest assured that we will exceed your expectations when it comes to our roofing service. We fully understand that the roof is a vital part of the home and that an improperly installed roof may not just ruin the appearance of the home but it may also be dangerous for the people living in the home.?

In the Miller's Home Improvement blog post, they point out that the foundation of the roof is composed of the frame for the roof and also the decking. If there is an issue with the roof?s foundation, what may result is a wavy or rippled roof. If the frame or decking for the roof is damaged, this can be dangerous for the people residing in the home. If it is safe to enter the attic, things to look for are cracks or rotting wood. It may even be better to have a professional roofer do the inspection. Another possibility is that the underlayment layer of the roof has not been placed properly, which is why the roof has a wavy or rippled appearance.

And it is important to have good ventilation for the roof or else too much moisture can get trapped in the attic. This may cause the wood decking to become warped as the underlayment gets distorted. It is important to note that getting the services of a quality roofing contractor is vital. The statement that ?you get what you pay for? is certainly applicable here. Allowing an inexperienced roofer to install the roof or perform a roof replacement can lead to problems, such as a wavy or rippled roof and its underlying potential problems. Eric Miller says, ?Please note that you can always trust Miller's Home Improvement to provide top-tier solutions for all your roof repair and insulation needs. With our decades of experience, we guarantee only the best results for all your needs. Call us today to get started.?

Starting in 2003, Miller's Home Improvement is committed to always exceeding customer expectations when they provide roofing repair, installation, or replacement that is both tailor-fitted and affordable. The design and choice of roofing materials will all be customized based on the preferences and needs of each specific homeowner or customer. They also want to assure everyone concerned that they have the necessary insurance and licenses for providing both residential and commercial roofing services. They want to stress that there are three vital reasons why homeowners and other property owners will choose Miller's Home Improvement over other roofing providers in Clinton Twp, and these are: their personalized approach; their excellence and professionalism; and the fact that they are fully licensed and insured.
