New York City Scaffold Accident Lawyer Keetick L. Sanchez Discusses Scaffolding Accidents

November 30, 2022

JACKSON HEIGHTS, NY - November 30, 2022 -
New York City scaffold accident lawyer Keetick L. Sanchez (https://accidentlawyer-queens.com/what-is-a-scaffolding-accident/) releases a new article explaining scaffolding accidents in New York. The lawyer mentions that construction workers in the United States are usually at risk of suffering accidents and fatalities while on the job. It has been found through research that construction workers are the fourth-highest group of employees at risk for work-related fatalities.

?According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, it is estimated that about 65 percent of construction workers actively work on scaffolding as part of their jobs. Unfortunately, scaffolding accidents are notoriously dangerous, resulting in approximately 60 fatalities and 4,500 injuries annually,? says the New York City scaffold accident lawyer.

The lawyer explains that the fifth most common OSHA safety violation in the country is the scaffolding safety violation. OSHA recently issued the highest fines to construction companies that are found violating OSHA safety rules and a lot of these fines were for scaffolding violations.

Attorney Keetick L. Sanchez adds that when scaffolding is not properly secured, constructed, or maintained, workers can fall from great heights and can be seriously injured. While there may be scaffold accidents that are unavoidable, some of them are caused by serious issues that remain unaddressed. These issues include missing safety guardrails, improper securing to the building, missing bracing, and many others.

In the article, attorney Sanchez also explains the New York Scaffold Law. This law helps protects workers who have been injured on a site because of safety problems. This law also holds contractors, owners, and agents liable when these accidents happen. If an accident occurs due to safety violations, multiple parties may be held legally and financially accountable for the worker?s injuries.

According to the accident attorney, ?While the scaffold law does help many construction workers and their families get the crucial help they need after an accident, these claims are not always easy to establish. The laws have been written very specifically, and the courts are very strict about what claims fall under the law. The burden of proof is on the victim to establish that laws have been violated and that the violation is what directly contributed to the accident.?

Lastly, the lawyer emphasizes the importance of having a skilled construction accident lawyer if they have been injured in a construction site accident. Having an experienced attorney may be able to help the victim receive the compensation that they deserve for the injuries they suffered.
