New Jersey criminal defense attorney Adam M. Lustberg (https://www.lustberglaw.com/new-jersey-harassment-lawyer/) releases a new article explaining the harassment laws in New Jersey. The lawyer mentions that harassment is defined as any actions taken by an individual or group that are intended to threaten, intimidate, or coerce another person. In theory, harassment can seem simple but the reality is that many people don?t understand what criminal harassment is under the law.

?A conviction of harassment can appear on your criminal record and background checks. Even though harassment is considered a low-level offense under the New Jersey criminal code, it can still have long-lasting implications on your personal and professional life. Having a conviction on your criminal record may invite unwanted attention, ruin your potential career opportunities, and cause emotional stress for you and your family,? the New Jersey criminal defense attorney says.

The lawyer explains that cyber-harassment carries its own definition under New Jersey Law. This involves sending communication in an online capacity, via an electronic device, or through a social networking site with the intent to harass another person.

Attorney Adam M. Lustberg adds that any type of unwanted or offensive conduct that singles out a person or group can be considered harassment. Harassment can also be the result of an argument, disagreement, or deterioration of relationships between two or more parties. Intent and purpose are also important factors that must be established in any harassment case.

In the article, the lawyer says, ?New Jersey harassment acts can have a lot of variables and no two cases are exactly the same. However, there are elements that the prosecution will always take into consideration when determining guilt. Elements like the gender, age, race, religion, and occupation of both parties can factor heavily when establishing the grounds of whether harassment did in fact take place.?

Lastly, the lawyer emphasizes that it is very important for a defendant to seek the help of an experienced criminal defense lawyer right away. Having an attorney who understands the complexities of the legal system may be able to help the defendant receive a more favorable outcome for their case.
