Downpour Defender has recently launched their mobility scooter raincoat or poncho that is geared specifically towards the elderly who use the mobility scooter and who are also still very active. The raincoat is designed to completely cover them from head to their ankles, leaving them snug, warm and, most of all, dry. The poncho is truly unique and has already been very positively received. "We wanted to create something that would really benefit the lives of the elderly and those who have to use a mobility scooter," says Vivian Hooton from Downpour Defender. "Our raincoat is the only one of its kind on the market today, as it not only covers people from head to ankle, but it is also designed specifically for people on a mobility scooter."

Research has shown that the elderly and the disabled suffer from significant social isolation. This becomes even more noticeable during seasons with significant rainfall. It is often impossible for these people to leave the house due to the weather, forcing them to become even more isolated. Downpour Defender aims to address this issue with their new product.

The poncho protects against both rain and wind, meaning people no longer have to carry clumsy umbrellas with them. Protecting users from the cold and rain, there is also less chance of them falling victim to nasty flu and cold infections. "Elderly and less mobile people who do venture out during bad weather are at a significantly increased risk of developing illnesses," says Dr. Ravi Patel. "As a result, most of them simply don't leave the house, but this can lead to significant mental anguish and even depression. It's like a catch 22 situation for them, as such. This is why I really support the Downpour Defender poncho."

The raincoat has been designed to be highly durable, while being affordable at the same time. It comes with a hood with a drawstring to protect the head. The poncho also has a large sleeve room, which enables people to wear a coat underneath. Put together, it is the perfect product for those who have mobility issues but wish to remain as active as possible.
