Brooklyn nursing home negligence attorney Samantha Kucher (https://www.rrklawgroup.com/nursing-home-negligence-lawyer/) releases a new article explaining the difference between negligence and abuse in nursing homes. The lawyer mentions that there are more or less 1.4 million individuals who are living in nursing homes or assisted living environments. Most of those who choose to live in nursing homes are the elderly who needs assistance when it comes to basic daily tasks such as eating and bathing.

?While the purpose of nursing homes is to provide these individuals adequate care with safe and healthy living environments, abuse and neglect have become increasingly more common. If you suspect that a loved one is being abused or neglected in a nursing home or assisted living home setting, it is important to get the experienced legal assistance of a neglect attorney in order to hold the staff and facility accountable,? says the Brooklyn nursing home negligence attorney.

The lawyer explains that nursing home abuse or neglect is the physical, emotional, sexual, or financial harm that is perpetrated against residents who are cared for in nursing homes or assisted living care facilities. Most cases of abuse and neglect are caused by the very people who have been entrusted for their care, and sometimes by other residents.

Attorney Samantha Kucher adds that while both nursing home abuse and neglect result in harm to the elderly individual, nursing home abuse varies slightly from nursing home neglect. Neglect is usually caused by an unintentional lack of cases, whereas abuse is intentional. Neglect also means a continuous and ongoing failure to meet the needed care of the resident.

According to the injury attorney, ?Because signs of nursing home abuse can vary greatly and are not always easily discernible, family members need to keep watchful for anything that may seem amiss when visiting. Many signs of abuse can be dismissed because of the individual?s age or cognitive impairment. Some residents fear saying anything and may even be too embarrassed to admit their abuse or exploitation to their family.?

Lastly, attorney Samantha Kucher says that it is very important to seek the help of an experienced Brooklyn nursing home negligence attorney if someone has been the victim of a pedestrian accident. Having a skilled attorney may be able to help the victim receive the compensation they deserve.
