Chicago, Illinois - January 02, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Meetpositives.com, a dating website for people with herpes, has revealed that the website is 100 percent anonymous and secure. Meet Positives is a community of positive singles or single people who were diagnosed to be positive for a certain STD. Members of the community get to find and date others who have experienced the same difficulties as a result of their condition. The website and community were established for the purpose of helping STD positive people avoid the potential rejection and embarrassment that they are likely to experience when they engage in regular dating. This usually happens when they reveal their condition to their potential mate.

Michael Task, a representative for MeetPositives.com, says, "You can be sure that the Meet Positives community is 100 percent anonymous and secure. As such, you can safely learn more about your condition from others who have experienced the same feelings. Get the latest information about a possible cure for herpes, vaccination and treatment options. Read member herpes drug reviews, side effects and success stories. Meet others who understand what you are feeling and are also looking to move on with their lives."

And members of the Meet Positives community can engage in herpes dating, meeting and dating other people who suffer from the same conditions, which allows them to avoid the potential embarrassment and rejection they have previously experienced. Michael Task says, "Dating with herpes can be difficult and at times, frightening. Meeting others who suffer from the same conditions offers you peace of mind. Our members understand you, understand your fears and looking forward to feeling normal again."

Having HSV1 or HSV2, the viruses that cause oral or genital herpes, respectively, doesn't have to stop people from meeting someone special. Meet Positives allows them to still have control over their happiness by never having the talk again. After registering to become a Meet Positives member, they can learn more about their condition from those who have had the same experiences. Members can also learn about the latest information about the most up-to-date treatments for herpes and other options. They can also read success stories, herpes drug reviews, and side effects. And most of all, the Meet Positives community can allow a member to meet others who know and understand what they are feeling and are also looking forward to getting on with their lives despite their condition.

Many people are actually surprised to learn that more than 40 million people have herpes, although only a few really know they have it. In the US, 1 in 5 people are living with herpes. Statistics show that genital herpes is the most prevalent STI in recent years. Thus, those who are living with herpes should realize that they are not alone. And even if there's no cure for herpes at the present time, herpes positive people can still have a happy and healthy life. Meet Positives was developed for positives and has thousands of herpes singles who have joined the community. And members of the community get to share their stories and obtain information from others on how to have better lives despite having herpes.

Established in 2019, Meet Positives serves as a standalone dating site for the exclusive use of single people who have been diagnosed to be STD positive. Their team members have more than 20 years of experience in matchmaking. Meet Positives is different from other STD communities because it doesn't belong to any affiliate network. It offers its services to members on its own, making sure that members can take advantage of the different services such as an online discussion forum for members, individual posts enabling other members to learn how they were able to have a happy life despite their diagnosis, the algorithm for matching, and more.

People who would like to know more about the Meet Positives herpes dating website can check out the Meet Positives website or contact them through the phone or by email.
