New York City divorce lawyers Ethan Steward and Martin Mohr (<https://www.newyorkfamilylawgroup.com/blog/should-our-parenting-time-schedule-be-adjusted-during-the-school-year/>) explain parenting time and co-parenting in a new blog post. The lawyers say that for many parents, the start of the school year brings a host of new challenges, including coordinating their parenting time schedules with their ex-partner and ensuring their children have the support they need to succeed academically.

Co-parenting almost always presents tough challenges, even when both parents are on the same page. It can be difficult to know what is best for a child, and how changing a parenting plan can impact their wellbeing, the article from the New York City divorce lawyers says.

One key tip the blog post emphasizes is the importance of being proactive in planning and communicating about parenting time. The New York Family Law Group advises parents to have an open and honest conversation about their needs and schedules well in advance of the start of the school year. This can help prevent misunderstandings and conflicts and ensure a smooth transition into the school year.

The updated blog post also provides guidance on how to handle unexpected events and changes in the schedule, such as school events or extracurricular activities. The New York Family Law Group advises parents to be flexible and willing to compromise, as well as to communicate clearly and promptly about any changes.

The New York Family Law Group is dedicated to providing comprehensive and compassionate legal guidance to families navigating the complexities of divorce and co-parenting. Their updated blog post on parenting time schedules during the school year is an invaluable resource for parents seeking to create a positive and supportive environment for their children during this busy and often stressful time of year.
