

Queens Construction Accident Attorney Keetick L. Sanchez Explains the Scaffolding Law in New York

December 20, 2022

JACKSON HEIGHTS, NY - December 20, 2022 -
Queens construction accident attorney Keetick L. Sanchez (https://accidentlawyer-queens.com/construction-accident-attorney/) releases a new article explaining the scaffolding law in New York. The lawyer mentions that the Scaffold Law requires that all scaffolding be erected and maintained in a safe manner and that all workers using scaffolding be properly trained in its use. It also requires that safety devices, such as safety belts and harnesses, be provided and used by workers.

?According to New York's scaffolding law, known as Labor Law 240, also known as the "Scaffold Law," owners and contractors are responsible for providing proper scaffolding, hoists, and other protective devices to ensure the safety of workers on construction sites. This law applies to all types of scaffolding, including ladders, cherry pickers, and other devices used for elevation,? the Queens construction accident attorney says.

In addition to the requirements outlined in the Scaffold Law, there are also OSHA regulations that must be followed when using scaffolding. These regulations include requirements for the strength and stability of scaffolding, as well as requirements for the placement of scaffolding in relation to power lines and other potential hazards.

If a worker is injured while working on scaffolding in New York, they may be entitled to compensation for their injuries. Under the Scaffold Law, owners and contractors are strictly liable for any injuries that occur due to their failure to provide proper scaffolding or other safety devices. This means that even if the owner or contractor was not negligent, they may still be held liable for the worker?s injuries.

In the article, the lawyer adds, ?A workers? compensation settlement is not always sufficient to cover costs that have been incurred in an injury or future medical attention that may be needed. Any settlement in a workers? compensation claim will revoke an injured party?s eligibility for compensation for future medical treatment, with any future expenses being paid out of pocket.?

Lastly, the lawyer emphasizes the importance of having a skilled construction accident lawyer if they have been injured in a workplace accident. Having an experienced attorney may be able to help the victim receive the compensation that they deserve for the injuries they suffered.
