Manhattan child custody lawyer Ryan Besinque (https://www.besinquelaw.com/child-custody-lawyer-new-york/) releases a new article explaining child custody and visitation in NYC. The lawyer mentions child custody as one of the most contentious areas in a divorce. Parents want their children to be with them as much as possible. But it can be hard to meet their needs when there is a conflict between the parents.

According to the Manhattan child custody lawyer, "While each parent does have a critical say in child custody matters, especially when they can come together cooperatively to work together toward custodial terms, what the court will always consider, first and foremost, is the child's best interests. This is why it is critical to have the finest family law attorney possible when the guardianship of your children is at stake."

The lawyer explains that the courts used to favor the mother in child custody cases. Today, however, this is no longer true. In the best interests of the children, both parents should be able to agree to spend equal amounts of time with their children.

Ryan Besinque states that if the parents cannot reach an agreement, the court will determine child custody. While most judges would like to have a fair custody decision, they will be heavily dependent on what is best for their child. The goal is to ensure consistency in the child's life.

According to attorney Besinque, regardless of whether the couple makes the decision themselves or requires intervention from the court, the judge won't make a decision unless they feel that the child is in their best interest. Every family is unique. The courts will evaluate factors such as parenting skills, primary caretaker, and quality of life at the home when deciding whether to award custody.

"While every family's circumstances are different, joint custody arrangements are usually most advantageous for the well-being of children. In the best of scenarios, joint custody minimizes parental conflict and competition and requires co-parents to find ways to work together for the benefit of the children," says the family lawyer.

Lastly, attorney Besinque emphasizes that it's very important to seek the help of an experienced child custody attorney in matters related to child custody and visitation. Having a skilled attorney may be able to help when it comes to creating agreements related to custody and help them when it comes to understand their rights and responsibilities.
