

Herpes Dating Website Allows Positive Singles to Never Have the Talk Again

Chicago, Illinois - January 02, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Meetpositives.com, a dating website for herpes positive singles, wants to emphasize that it allows positive singles (single people diagnose to be STD positive) to never have the "talk" again. As a herpes dating site, those who are herpes positive singles get to meet other people with the same condition. Knowing each other's condition lets them avoid the dreaded moment when they need to "talk" to the person they have been dating about their condition. It is during this "talk" where they open themselves up to the possibility of embarrassment and rejection.

Michael Task, a spokesperson for MeetPositives.com, says, "If you are living with herpes, you are not alone. There are many others like you and even though there's no cure for herpes, you can still live a happy and healthy life. For an infected person, it's very important to find the right crowd. The community here is made of similar people who understand your situation and will not be quick to judge. Meet Positives was built for positives and has thousands of herpes singles who have made this website their sharing platform. Members share their stories and information on how to live a better life with the infection."

Many people are not aware that herpes is quite common in the US. It has been estimated that more than 40 million people in the country have it but only a few people know they are infected. In the United States, one in five people have the infection, with genital herpes being the most prevalent STD in recent years.

The first benefit offered by the Meet Positives site is that it is a dating website for people with herpes. It allows herpes positive singles to meet someone new with HSV or the herpes simplex virus. This allows them to have peace of mind, knowing that they are dating someone with the same condition. This helps them avoid the "talk," which is never comfortable or easy because many people will not want to date with a herpes positive individual. That was the main reason why the Meet Positives platform was created, which is to allow herpes singles to meet and date without having to fear the "talk."

It is easy to become a member of the Meet Positives community. Herpes singles, or those with any other kind of STD, can simply create an account and provide vital information about their status and information about themselves that they can share with other herpes singles. And even if there's no cure for herpes at the current time, herpes positive people can still have a happy and healthy life, and this includes dating other singles. Meet Positives was designed to serve positive singles and has thousands of herpes singles who have already joined the community.

Having the HSV1 or HSV2 virus, which are the viruses that cause oral or genital herpes, respectively, need not stop people from meeting and finding another person that they can have a meaningful relationship with. After registering to join the Meet Positives community, they can learn more about their condition from those who have the same condition and how they are able to live healthy and happy lives. Members can also learn about the latest developments regarding treatments for herpes and other alternatives.

Launched in 2019, Meet Positives offers a standalone dating site for single individuals who have been diagnosed to be herpes or STD positive. And their matchmaking team members have over 20 years of experience in that particular field. Meanwhile, it is important to note that Meet Positives is distinct from other similar STD communities because it is not part of any affiliate network. It provides its services on its own, ensuring that community members can use and benefit from the available services, including individual posts that allow other members to learn how they were able to have a happy life despite their diagnosis, the algorithm for matching, an online discussion forum for members, and more.
