Long Island elder law attorney Seth Schlessel (<https://www.schlessellaw.com/long-island-elder-law-attorney/>) releases a new article explaining Elder Law in New York. The lawyer mentions that New Yorkers over 65 often have unique legal needs which are best addressed by an elder law lawyer, contrary to other populations. You may have built assets over the years and need guidance on how best to protect them.

Elder law is a specialized legal field that deals with the legal issues and concerns that affect seniors, including estate planning, Medicaid planning, and guardianship. The addition of this experienced elder law attorney to the Schlessel Law team will allow the firm to better serve the legal needs of Long Island's senior community, the Long Island elder law attorney says.

In addition to attorney Seth Schlessel's extensive experience in elder law, he is also well-versed in other areas of law that commonly affect seniors, including estate planning, Medicaid planning, and guardianship.

Attorney Schlessel has a strong understanding of the complex legal issues that seniors often face and is committed to providing personalized legal solutions that meet the unique needs of each individual client.

The lawyer explains that an elder law attorney may be able to help senior adults with anything from estate planning, Medicaid eligibility, and guardianship arrangements. Elder law lawyers can be a great resource for a loved one who is navigating the process of growing old.

Attorney Seth Schlessel also says that Medicare and private insurance usually won't cover nursing home stays for long periods. While some families are able to cover the costs of nursing homes or invest in long-term insurance, other families will have to use Medicaid. This can mean that assets that were not transferred at market value within the five preceding years may make the person ineligible for Medicaid.

In the article, attorney Seth Schlessel adds that estate planning is an important part of protecting the legacy of a person. A comprehensive estate plan may help a person decide where their assets should go as well as plan their loved one's caretaker once they pass away. An estate plan may help ensure that the client's future, their loved ones, and their assets are cared for.

Lastly, attorney Schlessel emphasizes that having an elder law attorney in Nassau County or Suffolk county is important when facing elder law matters. A skilled lawyer may be able to help the client save money while also planning their future in an efficient manner.
