A-1 Kwik Dry, a business in Louisville, KY, has announced that they now offer green carpet cleaning solutions. This cleaning service has been observed to be as good as traditional methods, while leaving no residues and being fast drying. This green service has already been very positively reviewed by those who have tried it.

"We wanted to make a positive contribution to the environment, something we know our customers will appreciate as well," says Brett Mcdaniel from A-1 Kwik Dry. "It is no secret that the cleaning industry has a tremendous environmental impact, using large amounts of water and releasing cleaning chemicals into the ground, water and air. We are proud to be able to offer a solution that is as effective as traditional methods but does not cause damage to the environment."

The environmental impact of cleaning businesses and cleaning products is very high. So much so, in fact, that there has been a global call by environmental activists including Greenpeace to have them banned altogether. While this ban has not been implemented yet, companies like A-1 Kwik Dry are proud to be proactive in their operations.

"The biggest concern with cleaning businesses is that they use cleaning products that contain very dangerous and toxic chemicals," says Dr. Suzanne Fletcher, an environmental scientist. "Thousands of chemicals used in cleaning products haven't been tested, which means they could be polluting streams, rivers and ground water. When this happens, aquatic creatures also start to suffer, as does the human population. Dangers exist both through contaminated water consumption and through topical contact. We are so pleased to see cleaning businesses make a public commitment to using green alternatives that do not have the potential to cause harm."

The problems caused by toxins in cleaning products have been well-documented and include various kinds of cancer and birth defects. It is important to note, however, that these are only the problems associated with known and tested chemicals. Thousands of other chemicals remain untested. This is why it is so important for businesses to commit to going green. Those who want more information can click here to find out how the company is leading the way in these efforts.
