Manhattan legal separation lawyer Juan Luciano (https://divorcelawfirmnyc.com/what-is-legal-separation-vs-divorce-in-new-york-city/) releases a new article explaining the difference between a divorce and a legal separation. The lawyer mentions that a legal separation is an option that is available for couples who are not ready to go through a divorce yet. Instead of seeking a divorce for various reasons, couples are able to legalize their separation.

?Legal separation is also possible if you and your spouse are contemplating divorce but have not made a decision yet. Legal separation is a binding agreement between you and your spouse. If you decide to pursue this route, it is important to seek the legal help of a separation agreement lawyer to ensure that the agreement is in both your mutual best interests,? says the Manhattan legal separation lawyer.

The lawyer says that the major difference between legal separation and divorce is that in a legal separation, the couple remains legally married. If the couple still has hope of reconciling, a legal separation agreement can make reconciliation possible without the need for a new marriage certificate.

Attorney Juan Luciano adds that an agreement for legal separation is similar to a divorce in the way that it contains the terms of key issues such as asset division and child custody. Many couples are often confused about the difference between legal separation and divorce. However, legal separation is a good option for couples who are looking to reconcile in the future.

?Couples who are legally separated can decide who lives in the shared home and who takes care of the children. They also can determine how to maintain their current standard of living so that it works for the children. Legal separation allows a couple to live separately without additional conflict while working on their marital problems,? says the legal separation attorney.

Lastly, the divorce lawyer Juan Luciano emphasizes that it is very important to have a skilled divorce lawyer when going through a divorce. Some processes in a divorce may be complicated and tough to navigate. Having an experienced lawyer may be able to help the client understand their rights.
