Brusco Vision, a vision correction clinic based in Falls Church, VA, has recently published a blog post titled, "Our Location ? Washington D.C.," which explains why they love their location in the Washington, DC area. They are conveniently situated near the US capital off the beltway in the Fairview Park Drive business center with lots of parking spots, including the covered parking in the garage next to the practice and the surface parking at the back of the building. They expect their patients to really feel at ease with the private, peaceful, and spacious green space around the office.

The vision correction center is just 15 miles from downtown Washington, DC. And it is only 15 to 20 miles from the Reagan National Airport and Dulles International Airport, which provide easy access to the practice for patients from other places. And towards the east, the city is bordered by the Anacostia River. And winter in the capital city is cool to cold with some slight snow and also possibly some heavy snow. Meanwhile, summers are hot with high humidity. Theodore Roosevelt Island, which is one of the many islands in the Potomac that is part of the city, is often visited by locals due to its many walking routes. Another well-known tourist spot is Kingman Island, which is a constructed island in Anacostia River. It is the location of the popular bluegrass festival that is held every summer. And Rook Creek Park offers views of some wilderness in the capital city. This park is home to coyotes, deer, foxes, and raccoons, and has over 32 miles of hiking paths and horseback riding locations. A variety of wildlife can be found in Washington DC, such as groundhogs, brown bats, flying squirrels, and Virginia opossums. Various kinds of birds can also be observed, including the bald eagle, which is the national bird.
