

Complete Realty Team Presents a 2023 Housing Market Forecast in New Video

January 30, 2023

Marietta, Georgia - January 30, 2023 -

Complete Realty Team, which is based in Marietta, GA, has recently posted a video on YouTube on their predictions for the housing market in 2023. REALTOR® Ken Mandich explains that there are two key factors that will shape the real estate market in 2023 and those are inflation and home financing rates. And these two factors are interconnected because higher inflation results into higher interest rates. In 2022, inflation was high and the Federal Reserve had to raise rates to control it. But there are signs that inflation is finally getting in control, which means that home financing rates are likely to go down.

While the year 2022 was a time of economic uncertainty and higher home financing rates, which significantly dampened buyer demand, it appears that there are signs of inflation getting in control, which promises lower rates. Many people involved in the real estate market are therefore excited about the prospects of the housing market in 2023.

According to the National Association of Realtors (NAR), "While 2022 may be remembered as a year of housing volatility, 2023 likely will become a year of long-lost normalcy returning to the market, . . . mortgage rates are expected to stabilize while home sales and prices moderate after recent highs, . . .?

Meanwhile, Lawrence Yun, chief economist at NAR, explains, "After a big boom over the past two years, there will essentially be no change nationally? Half of the country may experience small price gains, while the other half may see slight price declines.?"

The bottom line is that while the outlook for 2023 is positive, it will actually depend on the direction that inflation will take. It would be a good idea to be informed on the latest market trends and insights from trusted real estate professionals like Ken Mandich and the realtors at Complete Realty Team.
