Tree Service Experts Lexington Partners with Local Utility Companies to Keep Power Lines Clear and Safe

January 30, 2023

Lexington, Kentucky - January 30, 2023 -
Lexington, KY ? Tree Service Experts Lexington is proud to announce its new partnership with local utility companies to ensure maximum safety in the neighborhood. Through this partnership, Tree Service Experts Lexington will work with local utilities to ensure power lines stay clear during tree trimming and pruning services. This strategic collaboration will help prevent power loss during tree trimming and improve powerline safety during tree pruning.

Through this partnership, the company will consult with local utility companies to ensure that their technicians follow proper safety protocols when trimming and pruning trees. Before beginning any work, this includes inspecting the tree for potential hazards, such as branches hanging too close to electrical lines or telephone wires.

Additionally, according to the company's CEO, Tree Service Experts Lexington's highly experienced tree professionals are well-trained in arboricultural safety protocols. They will never leave a job without ensuring the area is safe and secure.

Furthermore, they have access to the most up-to-date tools and equipment to safely complete all commercial or residential tree trimming and pruning jobs. This cutting-edge technology helps ensure that the safety of their client's property is always considered during any tree trimming or pruning service.

Tree Service Experts Lexington's dedication to safety does not stop there; their technicians also understand the importance of routine maintenance for powerlines and other utilities to ensure these essential services remain stable throughout the year. They will regularly check powerlines for potential hazards during any tree trimming or pruning service to avoid temporary power outages or permanent damage. In addition, they will employ preventative measures designed to ensure branches do not come close to the utility lines throughout the trimming and pruning procedures.

In order to create an effective collaboration, tree service providers and utility companies must thoroughly understand each other's needs. For example, utility companies must communicate the areas where they see the most damage from fallen trees. In contrast, tree service providers need to provide detailed assessments of hazardous trees before they can be removed or trimmed.

This information should be shared promptly so that the necessary work can be completed quickly and efficiently. Additionally, both parties should establish protocols for effectively responding to emergencies and regularly review their policies and procedures to ensure they are up-to-date.

The collaboration between tree services and utility companies also needs to extend into preventative measures. For example, utility companies should take advantage of professional arborists who can identify dangerous, dead, or diseased trees that could cause future problems. Tree service providers can then employ best practices, such as pruning or cabling to reduce the risk of potential outages from these trees.

Furthermore, both parties should develop strategies for planting new trees that reduce the chances of power line interference without compromising aesthetic appeal or increasing maintenance costs. During the recent partnership announcement, Tree Service Experts Lexington noted that it had put all of this in place, guaranteeing proper communication and collaboration when working on trees close to powerlines.

"We believe that no one should ever have to worry about their power going out due to tree damage," said

Burton Lanes, CEO of Tree Service Experts Lexington. "By partnering with local utility companies, we can provide residents with peace of mind knowing that tree trimming and pruning services are done safely and efficiently."
