February 27, 2023

COLUMBIA, MD - February 27, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Columbia, MD, roofing contractor Ridgeline Roofers Columbia is helping homeowners patch up their property's roof after damage due to bad weather conditions.

Columbia is no stranger to heavy showers and thunderstorms with the National Weather Service frequently issuing severe thunderstorm watch notices for the DC Baltimore area. In 2022, in May and September, the region faced the fury of 60 mph winds with news organizations reporting hazardous conditions for Howard County residents. During bad storms, while residents bunker down in their homes, fallen trees and other swept-up debris can damage roofs and puncture the plywood sheathing that protects the home's interior. If the damage is severe, the exposed areas of the roof can deteriorate further leading to the weakening of the home's structure and endangering the lives of those living within.

The spokesperson for Ridgeline Roofers Columbia talks about what to do before and after storms and strong winds by saying, "If the weather forecast is causing you to worry, we urge you to schedule a roof inspection to get on top of the problem. Our 30-point roof inspection can find weak spots in your roofing that are likely to give way when mother nature is at her worst. After the storm subsides, if you find that parts of your roof did not survive the onslaught, give us a call as soon as possible. Our team of experienced roofers will come out to your location and immediately remedy your roofing problem. We begin by securing the area so that there is no danger to you and your loved ones. Next, we inspect just how extensive the damage is and suggest solutions that can fit within your budget. If your roof has reached its age, we may recommend a roof replacement. Once you are on board, we use the best roofing materials in the industry to leave your roof as good as new and also fix any damage that may have occurred to the underlayment. There is nothing to fear when Ridgeline Roofers Columbia is only a phone call away."

Another testimonial highlighted on the company's website says, "We are in love with our new roof. The color was spot on, and the gutters look amazing. My spouse and I are thrilled to not have to worry about roof leaks and we are hoping to see improvement in our attic venting when the season changes. Removal and installation of the roof took less than 8 hours, and the gutters were installed 2 days later. Ernest was amazing with being a stickler for the details. He takes pride in his work and came back out a few days after the installation to fix a slight issue we noticed. Now our house is perfect. Thank you so much!"
