Pasadena, CA ? Pasadena Tree Services is proud to announce the launch of its new educational program designed to help homeowners understand the importance of soil health for tree growth. The program, which company CEO Bernett Rojas will lead, will teach homeowners the fundamentals of soil composition and how it impacts their trees' long-term health and longevity.

However, Pasadena Tree Services' new educational program will go beyond teaching the fundamentals of soil composition. Instead, it will provide homeowners with practical tools and resources to help them understand how to improve soil health. Participants will learn about identifying common soil problems, such as compaction and erosion, and methods for improving soil structure and fertility.

Additionally, topics including mulching, aeration, and organic amendments will be discussed to give homeowners a comprehensive understanding of how to maintain healthy soil. The company is also planning to host a series of workshops throughout Pasadena that will be open to the public and offer one-on-one consultations with tree care experts. At these events, attendees can ask questions and receive personalized advice on improving their soils.

The program aims to empower homeowners by educating them on properly caring for their trees. Once participants have completed the program, they can expect to gain an increased understanding of proper tree management, which includes knowing when and how often trees should be fertilized or pruned for optimal growth. With this knowledge, homeowners can confidently make informed decisions about their tree care and take proactive steps toward protecting their trees from potential damage caused by poor tree maintenance programs.

Soil health is an often-overlooked factor when considering the overall well-being of a tree, yet it can have a profound effect on its lifespan. By understanding how soil affects a tree's wellness, homeowners can be in a position that allows them to protect their trees and ensure they remain healthy.

"We believe that knowledge is power and that every homeowner should have access to information that can help them better care for their trees," said Rojas. "By offering this educational program, we hope to empower people with the tools they need to make smart decisions about their landscaping and create beautiful outdoor spaces that will last for generations."

The educational program will also cover soil nutrition basics, how to test soil health, improve soil structure and fertility, and more. Participants will also gain valuable insight into how soil pH levels affect tree growth and how different soil types impact a tree's development. Pasadena Tree Services will also provide resources such as books, articles, and online courses to help people learn more about soil health and tree care.

In addition to providing education on soil health, Pasadena Tree Services will also offer assistance with pruning, trimming, and other tree services. The company has decades of experience in the industry and is committed to helping homeowners keep their trees healthy and vibrant.
