This is our second wood fired oven, the previous was from a different company. While a little more difficult to install, mostly due to the weight, (we bought the large one) it has been well worth it. It holds its heat better than the other one and makes great pizza, bread etc."

The outdoor pizza oven has been gaining in popularity in many Australian homes because it can provide very delicious real pizzas in just a few minutes. The smokiness and flavour of the pizza baked in a wood-fired pizza oven cannot be matched by those baked in gas or electric ovens.

Those who plan to get a wood fired pizza oven will need to take into account a number of important elements. First of all, it is important to determine the size of pizza oven that will fit into the backyard. It is also important to note that the oven is very heavy and it is vital to consider its expected usage and the size of the household. And, of course, it is essential to consider the budget before making a purchase.

In terms of size, it is vital to note that a bigger wood fired pizza oven would be preferable if the home has a backyard with a lot of space. Bigger ovens have more space for the wood and the wider space makes it much easier to get the food in and out of the oven. It can also provide more precise temperature control. With smaller ovens, it is much more difficult to regulate the temperature and it is much harder to move the food around.
