Dr. Salamay obtained his BS degree with honors from Logan University, St. Louis in 2004. Next, he went to the famous Life College of Chiropractic and completed his chiropractic degree after four years. He was included in the Dean?s List before he became a Doctor of Chiropractic. In 2010, he finished his MS degree in human nutrition with cum laude honors from the University of Bridgeport. He is currently busy earning a diploma in functional neurology at the Carrick Institute of Graduate Studies.

Chiropractic medicine is based on the idea that as part of the regular wear and tear suffered by the neck and spine, including accumulated trauma due to physical injury of illness, the neck and spine get pushed out of alignment. Such misalignments can result into terrible back pain and result into pinched nerves, which happen because pressure is exerted on a nerve by surrounding tissues, such as muscles, tendons, cartilage, and bone. These are known as subluxations and can happen all throughout the body, resulting into pain and reduced mobility.

A pinched nerve can be caused by herniated discs or bulging discs, inflamed facet joints, or bone spurs. After determining the cause of the pinched nerve, the chiropractor will determine the best course of treatment, which typically depends on the cause and the location of the pinched nerve. The idea is to relieve the pressure on the nerve and the chiropractor usually does this with manual manipulation, including massage therapy. For pinched nerves due to spine misalignment, the chiropractor can manipulate the bones back into their proper position.
