"We cut away the middlemen by handling every aspect of your windows and doors from planning to installation to warranty and maintenance. As a result, what we provide is comprehensive, and you may have it made just how you want it," the company asserts.

Replacement front doors may be made from a variety of materials, adds the Bluffton firm. Among these options include wood, steel, fiberglass, and aluminum doors.

Wooden doors are the most pricey and high-maintenance type, but they are also the most enduring and aesthetically-pleasing option. To minimize the likelihood of damage, experts recommend replacing the old wooden front door with one made of wood veneer over an engineered wood core.

Steel is another popular choice for front doors, particularly on homes. It is secure, affordable, and withstands severe weather like strong winds. Steel doors have the added benefit of being easier to maintain.

Replacement entry doors made of fiberglass are also becoming popular. Its silky skin makes it easy to apply paint with a single stroke. These entrances save on energy costs, need nothing in the way of upkeep, and hold up well against everyday wear and tear. When considering lifespan and resistance to corrosion, the aluminum entry door is an excellent option for a home. The replacement door company advises clients on suitable materials for their front entrance.
