Sacramento has some of the worst traffic in the country, it has a significant number of auto accidents. Accident victims are advised to contact one of the Kreeger Law Firm accident attorneys as soon as possible because the statute of limitations provides them with only a two-year time frame to find a personal injury claim.

Meanwhile, the average cost of a car accident is hard to determine due to the range of factors that need to be considered. These expenses can either be medical or property damage. The medical expenses will depend a lot on the extent of the injuries. Furthermore, the decisions of emergency personnel may have a substantial impact on the medical costs. The seriousness of the injuries will also add to the costs, especially if the injury requires surgery. If a victim dies as a result of the injuries caused by the accident, this also has a huge impact on the overall cost.

The cost of property damage is dependent on the general conditions of the accident. The size of the car compared to the other car will also have an effect on the expenses for property damage. Other factors are the age of the vehicle and the kind of repairs needed for the car. If the insurer considers the car as a total loss, this will cause a large increase in overall costs. There are other factors as well, such as the psychological and emotional impact of the accident and some of these may even be long-term, like post-traumatic stress disorder, which can result to substantial expenses that the other party has to pay.
