IT Consulting Business Now Offers Free Network Analysis

December 09, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

IT Experts Montreal, a business in Beaconsfield, Quebec, Canada, is happy to announce that they now offer a free network security analysis as part of their IT consulting services. This analysis is designed to make sure their clients' sites are completely safe from malicious attacks from a range of directions. The analysis is both free and no obligation.

"It takes just one gap in the security of your network for a hacker or virus to take advantage of it," says James Hutchinson from IT Experts Montreal. "This can come from anywhere, from an international hacker to a disgruntled employee. And when it happens, your business can quite literally be brought to a halt."

IT Experts Montreal warns businesses that it is nearly impossible to guarantee every single computer, laptop, server, smartphone and tablet within an organization is secure. And with many businesses now allowing for remote working, allowing people to access the network from various places, the chances of a breach are bigger than ever.

The company has long been providing computer support to customers, and they have come across almost every security breach imaginable. As a result, they developed their free security and network analysis, which is also known as a security review or security audit. After the review, customers are presented with an in-depth report that clearly shows just how secure their network is. Additionally, it comes with recommendations in terms of actions to be taken to improve security.

"You'll sleep better knowing your data and network are secure," adds James Hutchinson. "When a business experiences a security breach, they lose not just a lot of data, but also the trust of their customers and that is something they often cannot recover from."

The security analysis is only available for business computer systems, and not for personal or home office jobs. It is also not offered as part of an equipment repair service. The value of the audit is very high, but it is actually offered for free to those who want to have the identified problems repaired. Should they wish another provider to fix the problem, a small charge will be applicable.
