Dr. Lawrence S. Han, DPM, is now offering patients the Saorsa Swift plantar warts treatment at his podiatry clinic in Cranberry Township, PA.

The Saorsa Swift system has revolutionized the treatment of plantar warts and is changing the way podiatrists approach this common condition. Approved by the FDA in 2018, the treatment has already been used successfully on tens of thousands of patients worldwide and is now being widely adopted by podiatrists in the United States due to its many advantages over conventional treatment methods.

Previously, plantar warts treatments such as cryotherapy, laser ablation, and salicylic acid application were effective but imprecise, often damaging surrounding healthy tissue and requiring post-procedural dressing to aid in the healing process. Patients also reported discomfort and pain during these treatments, with some even requiring anesthesia. Laser ablation and electrocautery produced hazardous plumes that put both patients and doctors at risk.

In contrast, the Saorsa Swift plantar wart therapy system uses microwave radiation to target the affected tissue with highly controlled energy doses. The microwaves penetrate to a predetermined depth, creating localized heat energy that eliminates plantar warts while leaving surrounding healthy tissue untouched. This results in faster, cleaner, and safer treatments with minimal discomfort and no need for post-procedural dressing.

The Saorsa Swift system also offers other advantages over traditional methods, including shorter appointment times for podiatrists and reduced costs for patients. The precision of the treatment also means that more patients can be treated each day, improving access to care for those suffering from plantar warts. Overall, the Saorsa Swift system is considered a game-changer in the treatment of plantar warts and is rapidly becoming the go-to treatment for podiatrists across the country.
