December 09, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Right Price Medical, a medical office in Las Vegas, NV, has released new information on when women should consider a visit to a gynecologist. They have found that many of their patients attend when they have already been experiencing symptoms for a considerable amount of time and they want to encourage people to come for a checkup more frequently. This will also enable them to receive the necessary treatment before something becomes a serious health issue.

"Nobody really wants to go see a gynecologist," says a representative from Right Price Medical. "We deal with very private and intimate issues and people often have a sense of embarrassment when it comes to these issues. However, health conditions that are addressed in our office can be very serious, sometimes even life threatening, so it is vital that they come to see us as soon as they notice symptoms."

Right Price Medical has listed four specific reasons as to why someone should make an appointment as soon as possible. These are missed periods, bleeds between periods, problems with urination, and abdominal discomfort or pain. While most of these issues are likely to be nothing, there is a chance that they may point to something more significant which requires immediate medical attention.

What the office is also trying to achieve is lift the taboo on gynecological issues. To do so, they want to make the conversation more accessible and normal for people to take part in. As a result, they have launched a significant social media campaign as well. They ask people to follow them on Twitter through <https://twitter.com/rightpricedi>. Here, they will be able to share and comment on important news.

They have also asked people to give them a 'Like' on Facebook through <https://www.facebook.com/Right-Price-Medical-1487576191562774/>. Not only can patients become involved in information in the same way as on Twitter, but they can really get involved in the conversation as well. Various gynecological issues are addressed on this page, and people are asked to express their views and opinions. "When we start talking about things, we lift the taboo veil on it as well," adds the representative from Right Price Medical.
