They present a list of the top 32 Barcelona restaurants that tourists should try in 2023 based on their TripAdvisor and Google reviews, comments from local residents, if the restaurant was given a Michelin star, and how many times the restaurant was mentioned in Forbes magazine. These have been subdivided into a number of categories, such as: the best for tasting local food; the original restaurants in the Catalan capital; the least expensive restaurants but are still good and nice; restaurants recommended by the residents; and the restaurants with the best interior designs.

Maná 75 has also published a list of the best tapas bars in Barcelona. A spokesperson says, "Finding quality tapas is not an easy task either and even more so in the city of Barcelona where in each street there are more than 4 tapas bars or restaurants. That's why we list 30 restaurants in Barcelona that offer exquisite traditional tapas with the best value for money. We can assure you that they will leave you wanting more and that they will make you live an extraordinary experience."

Tapas, just like paellas, are some of the best known kinds of Spanish cuisine. Tapas are basically bar snacks that are often served with wine or beer. They are small plates of food and have been traditionally offered for free with each drink but that is no longer the case today. Tapas are often used as snacks before a late dinner, as is typical in Spain. There are various types of tapas, which are the: pinchos or pintxos; cold tapas; hot tapas; and cheese and charcuterie platters. Pinchos are bread slices with different kinds of toppings. Cold tapas can range from cold soups, such as salmorejo and gazpacho, snacks such as anchovies and olives, to salads. Hot tapas vary by a wide range. The cheese and charcuterie platters usually include both soft and hard cheeses and various kinds of ?embutidos? from jamon serrano, chorizo, to local cured meats. Their list of the best tapas bars in Barcelona can be accessed at <https://mana75.es/tapas-bares-barcelona/>.
