Foy Elliot, CEO of Citrus Heights Tree Service Experts, is passionate about trees' role in mitigating climate change. "Trees are truly one of our most powerful allies in the fight against climate change," Elliot said. "By capturing and storing carbon dioxide, trees help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and combat the effects of global warming. Our goal is to help our community understand the incredible potential of trees and the steps we can take to maximize their impact on the environment."

Citrus Heights Tree Service Experts is committed to educating the public about the carbon-capturing abilities of trees and the importance of proper tree care. The company offers a variety of resources and educational materials designed to help homeowners and community members make informed decisions about their trees and the best ways to care for them.

According to Elliot, proper tree care is essential to maximizing the carbon-capturing potential of trees. "While all trees can help to combat climate change, their ability to capture and store carbon dioxide is significantly impacted by their overall health and maintenance," Elliot said.
