They currently have an overall rating of 5.0 out of 5 stars on Google and in a recent review, Francisco W. gave them five stars and said, "A coworker referred McHenry Roofing to me after I mentioned that I needed a contractor for my roof following a hail storm in Baltimore's Pigtown neighborhood. The team responded quickly to my roofing emergency and performed the necessary work temporarily before it began leaking during a rainstorm. They guaranteed that they would identify the source of the problem so that I wouldn't need to worry about future leaks. The roofers were completely transparent about the work that needed to be done, offered a competitive price, and finished the job quickly. Most importantly, my roof has been steadily holding up since they completed repairs."

McHenry Roofing recommends that homeowners contact them as soon as possible if they believe their roofing has a leak or other kinds of problems. The timely repair of the roof is vital because it can save the homeowner a significant amount of money in the future. This is because even a small roof problem like a small leak or a loose shingle can become a serious problem if unattended to for too long. The extent of the roof damage can spread fast and water getting inside the home can affect other valuable parts of the home, such as the foundation, the walls, furniture, and other precious belongings.

An important part of the roof is the flashing, which has the role of helping close gaps in joints to prevent water from getting through. A roof flashing is made of thin metal that is capable of resisting moisture and the elements, such as strong winds. The material could be copper, lead, aluminum, or galvanized steel. It works by collecting pooling water and directing it away from the location. One important type of flashing is drip edge flashing because it helps to direct water away from the core structure of the roof. It protrudes over the roof edge and lets the water drip down such that the water avoids dripping on the fascia.
