IL based Northwestern Hair Restoration is offering the community a series of specialized hair restoration services. All are welcome to contact the clinic today to schedule a consultation and take the first step to regaining a fuller head of hair.

While some may believe that there are no reliable options that will help them combat hair loss or a receding hairline, the truth is that research has advanced considerably in recent years. Some may already be familiar with Follicular Unit Extraction (FUE), but there are variants of this procedure that may be more suitable for certain patients. Since there is no way to determine which is best for a patient without a careful assessment, this tends to be the hair clinic?s first step.

In FUE, hair follicles are extracted from a donor site using special micropunches, following which they are implanted in the target area (where balding is occurring). Local anesthesia is used to ensure patient comfort, and this method notably requires no sutures. FUE, the clinic says, is one of the oldest methods of hair restoration still practiced today, but its success rate has been significantly enhanced thanks to the introduction of more modern techniques. As such, hair transplant specialists tend to have a great deal of experience in this procedure.

However, it is not the only option. Northwestern Hair Restoration also offers two variants of the procedure, known as Micro FUE and Discrete FUE. These procedures come with certain additional benefits that clients may prefer, and their viability for each individual can be determined during the consultation phase.

Micro FUE differs from traditional FUE in that it allows more follicles to be harvested during a procedure. As a result, the region affected by hair loss will receive more hair and look more natural. Recovery may also be faster, due to the procedure requiring a fewer number of total grafts. The clinic says they are also able to transfer more oil glands along with the hair follicles, again contributing to a more natural result.

Discrete FUE is used when a natural appearance is the client?s top priority, especially if they prefer not to make it apparent that they had a procedure at all. Here, the clinic skips the buzz cut (which is necessary in the other procedures). Those who need to be at social events or even in front of cameras relatively soon after a procedure are advised to ask about Discrete FUE when they visit Northwestern Hair Restoration.

Reviews for the hair restoration clinic in Chicago are glowing, which is a highly positive sign for those who wish to learn how others have fared in the past. Since hair restoration can be a long process ? and the best results become apparent well after the initial treatments take place ? the best way to determine how successful the clinic?s efforts are is to find feedback from clients who have already received help. Fortunately, the clinic boasts an abundance of satisfied clients who are eager to share their experiences.

?Conveniently located with helpful staff,? states an online review from Nikola I., ?this hair clinic is among the best in Chicago! It was a smooth, quick, and informative consultation process with real treatment options given to me along with key details about each option. I felt welcome, listened to and better informed of my particular options for the results I wanted to maintain over the long term. I appreciate having a world class clinic right in the heart of downtown that was effortless from start to finish. I highly recommend Northwestern for your hair loss prevention needs!?

Ken L. has similarly high praise to share. Their review says, ?Dr. Vinay and his team are the best in the business. I researched five different companies before selecting Northwestern Hair, and I could not have made a better decision. I am at day 11 of my procedure, and everything looks great. Could not be happier with the initial results. If you are looking to have a procedure completed, look no further than this office. There are very good reasons as to why they have such positive reviews. They are experts in what they do.?

Northwestern Hair Restoration is currently ready to work with new clients who wish to win the battle against stubborn hair loss. Where other methods may provide less-than-satisfactory results, Northwestern Hair Restoration?s series of FUE procedures can offer an individual real hope. Those interested may contact the clinic by phone or email to learn more.
